The 352nd Fighter Group was a unit of the Eighth Air Force that was located in the European Theater of Operations during World War II. The unit served as bomber escort, counter-air patrols, and attacking ground targets. It initially flew P-47 Thunderbolt aircraft before converting to P-51 Mustang in April 1944. The group was located at RAF Bodney in England for the majority of its service and were nicknamed the Blue-nosed Bastards of Bodney due to the distinctive blue of the nose and upper cow!

The Blue Nosed Bastards of Bodney I'm often asked about the paint job on our Piper Turbo Arrow III (PA-28R-201T) and I intentionally do not give a short answer. We've been restoring the Arrow for about 10 years and finally completed all the internal and structural updates that would affect the quality of the paint job.
