For Francis G Hutchins, author of Democratizing Monarch - A Memoir of King Birendra, his pupil at Harvard during the academic year 1967-68 could do no wrong. The late king, then crown prince, was a good student "always affable, polite and attentive, deferential toward his parents, wore jeans like other students at Harvard at the time, and retained his remarkable modesty even after he returned to Nepal and became officially...both an emperor and a god, albeit of a benign and approachable sort."

A king who could do no wrong- Nepali Times

Professor Hutchins, in his book Democratizing Monarch, a memoir of Nepal's King's Birendra, writes, "Like Dhruva, Birendra seems certain to remain a fixed point of reference." As the pole star, Dhruva is also called Graha-dhara, pivot of the planets, to which the pole star is thought to be linked by invisible strands of nurturing influence."
